China Said to Draft Rules for Tobin Tax on Currency Transactions

China's central bank has drafted rules for a tax on foreignexchange transactions that would help curb currency speculation, according to people with knowledge of the matter.

The initial rate of the so-called Tobin tax may be kept at zero to allow authorities time to refine the rules, said the people, who asked not to be identified as the discussions are private. The tax is not designed to disrupt hedging and other foreign-exchange transactions undertaken by companies, they said.

Imposing a levy on foreign-exchange trading would be the most extreme step yet by policy makers to prevent speculative bets against the Chinese currency, after state-run banks repeatedly intervened to support the Yuan and the government intensified a crackdown on capital outflows. A Tobin tax would complicate plans by China to create an international reserve currency and could undermine the leadership's pledge to increase the role of market forces in the world's second-largest economy.

"There haven't been many successful experiences of this happening anywhere else in the world."

IMF Inclusion

The rules still need central government approval and it's not clear how quickly they can be implemented, the people said. The People's Bank of China didn't immediately respond to a faxed request for comment. PBOC Deputy Governor Yi Gang raised the possibility of implementing the punitive measure late last year in an article written for China Finance magazine.
